Computer and Network Usage Policy (CCLC BP 3720)

It is the policy of the Cabrillo Community College District that use of computing and networking resources at Cabrillo College is primarily for purposes related to the institution's mission of education and public service. All users of the network and computer resources have a responsibility not to compromise computer and network function and to respect the rights of others.

Users of College information resources must respect copyrights and licenses, respect the integrity of computer-based information resources, refrain from seeking to gain unauthorized access, respect the rights of other computer users, and respect existing laws regarding the use of college resources for political, personal and commercial use.

The confidentiality of electronic resources cannot be assured, but the College recognizes that employees have a substantial interest in privacy. Such confidentiality may be compromised by applicability of law or administrative regulation supporting this policy, by unintended redistribution, or because of inadequacy of current technologies to protect against unauthorized access. Computer and network use policies at this institution supplement but do not replace existing state and federal laws and regulations regarding use of electronic resources.
